

My warped and twisted brain borrowed the words to Samurai Lapin (by Mata Haggis, <http://matazone.co.uk/samuri1.html>) and screenshots from the Furuba anime... and see what it came up with?

My lord sleeps quietly and so he should.

I am sworn to protect him.

It is my duty.

I would follow him to the gates of hell.

Every night I defend him from the lords that threaten him.
Every night I am victorious. I am undefeated!

An army, although it may be attacked, is not to be attacked if it is in desperate circumstances and there is the possibility that the enemy will fight to the death.

I am the last,

and I shall fight to the death.
As everything in the world is but a sham,
Death is the only sincerity.

They come again!

I am Samurai Lapin!

Your kung-fu skills are no match for my swordsmanship!

Be true to the thought of the moment and avoid distraction.

You can never win because you are distracted by life!

Know the enemy and know yourself; in a hundred battles you will never be in peril!

As water has no constant form, there are in war no constant conditions.

Adapt and be without form!

I am Samurai Lapin! You are... unworthy.

A warrior does not seek fame, it is the Tao alone that nourishes and completes all things.

My lord

still sleeps.

And in the morning

he will not know of the night's battle.

